

Despite reports on the drop in the number of humanities majors since the 1960s, the number of bachelor's degrees in the humanities has grown appreciably since its nadir in the mid-1980s, with more than 185,000 degrees reported in each year from 2009 to 2011.

From the American Academy's Humanities Report Card 2013